

Lucius Arkmann

Lucius Arkmann is a French guitarist, composer and arranger.

He trained at the Conservatoire national supérieur de musique et de danse de Paris (CNSMDP), first in classical guitar in the class of Tristan Manoukian, then in writing (écriture) and orchestration. There he studied fugue and sonata with Thierry Escaich, counterpoint with Thibault Perrine, harmony with Yves Henry and orchestration with Marc-André Dalbavie. Before the CNSM, he studied guitar with Gabriel Bianco at the conservatoire of the 13th arrondissement of Paris, following a masterclass with Judicaël Perroy.

His graduation recital, Godspeed (2023), pairs the guitar with video projection. He conceived it and directed its visual design in collaboration with the graphic artist Nicolas. The programme ranges across the repertoire from the Baroque to the contemporary and incorporates a part of improvisation.

Improvisation holds a central place in his work. He devoted his master's thesis to it, Becoming an Improviser (Devenir improvisateur), in which he approaches the learning of improvisation through research-based work and puts it into practice in his playing.

In concert, he performs as a soloist, in chamber music and in amplified ensembles. He has three regular duos: Atome, with the flautist Nina; a flute-and-guitar duo with Artem Naumenko; and Sol-Air, a guitar duo with Violaine Sananes.

His practice spans the classical repertoire in all its forms, contemporary music, popular and electronic music, as well as salsa and bossa nova. An arranger and composer, he writes in both early and modern styles, and sight-reads from piano scores.

He teaches at the conservatoire of Euibonne (Val-d'Oise), where he leads a guitar class open to every kind of practice and holds a position as arranger.

He co-founded the Jonasfried Studio with Nicolas, dedicated to contemporary art. Alongside this, he carries out research in musical analysis and orchestration.
